Instructions: Employees can utilize the Individual Development Plan form as a tool to assist them with their career development. The purpose of an IDP is to help employees with reaching their short and long- term goals, while also improving their current job performance by providing them with a concrete plan of action.

While supervisors can assist employees with their IDP by providing them with feedback on their strengths, improvement areas and organizational requirements, it is primarily the responsibility of the employee to take the initiative for their own career development.

Employees should:

- Assess what professional goals they want to achieve
- Determine what skills are needed to meet their goals
- Determine what resources are available to them that will assist with meeting their goals
- Assess what opportunities are available after training to help them further develop these new skills
- Determine how long it will take them to achieve their goals

Below is an example of a completed Individual Development Plan:
